

STUDY HALL SERIES

Self-led training modules...ready when you are!

Leaders of Character

Applying West Point principles to achieve character-driven leadership

Whatever the mission of your organization, it requires conscious, consistent leadership to accomplish the work processes and activities needed to be successful. This Study Hall lesson will provide valuable tools and perspectives to help you move those activities and processes along.

You will be encouraged to compare the learning experiences shared in this lesson with the lessons you have learned so far in your career. Some of the specific skills discussed may not be entirely new to you, but what may be new and different is the glimpse this lesson offers into a highly successful leadership development process, and the keys that process holds for how you—as a leader—can be more effective in your own organization.

The PURPOSE of this lesson is to:

- Explore a unique approach to developing six fundamental leadership skills essential to success in any organization.
- Demonstrate that leadership, and the process of developing our own leadership abilities and those of others, is often a collection of experiences, courses, training, and more.
- Assess your current skill level as a leader to determine how you can model the skills that already make you a strong leader; and develop skills that will further strengthen your overall effectiveness.
